* New courses that I developed.

In addition to these formal courses, at least 54 students have completed credits in BB 499, which is Undergraduate Research and 63 students have completed credit in U ST 290H, which is Freshman Mentor Programs for Freshman Honor Students.

I am currently the coordinator for the Biochemistry-CALS (formerly Agricultural Biochemistry) Curriculum for undergraduates. About 170 students have received B.S. degrees, the first being awarded in 1982. As of January 1, 2022, I am advisor for 11 undergraduate students and mentor for 21 students who will graduate with a major in biochemistry-CALS or agricultural biochemistry.

I serve as faculty advisor for Beta Sigma Psi social fraternity (1994-).

I serve as faculty advisor for Alpha Zeta Agricultural Honor Soc. (1983-86; 2016-).

I served as faculty advisor for Lutheran Student Fellowship (1992-08).

I served as faculty advisor for Beta Beta Beta, biology honor society (1997-03).

I serve as faculty advisor for Pre-Vet Club (2005-10; 2015-).

I have participated in these special educational programs:

B. RESEARCH AND ARTISTIC CREATIVITY

1. Summary of Recent Research:

Dr. Beitz's recent research activities include the etiology and prevention of ketosis in dairy cows, role of animal-derived foods, other dietary ingredients, and a cholesterol reductase-containing microbe on cholesterol homeostasis in animals and humans, and nutritional and genetic control of milk and meat animal composition. Dr. Beitz's research program is related to the biochemistry and physiology of nutrition and is conducted partly as a joint effort with animal and human nutritionists.

Study of the etiology and prevention of fatty liver and ketosis has been a major emphasis of Beitz's research program. The technology to use glucagon to treat and prevent fatty liver and ketosis in periparturient dairy cattle was developed.

A second project involved studies of using a probiotic to prevent and treat Johne's disease.

A third major project is designed to evaluate the role of specific regulators of fat deposition in beef cattle and of milk fat synthesis by dairy cattle. Nutritional and genetic impacts on milk and meat composition with emphasis on fatty acids and the subsequent eating qualities of dairy and meat products were evaluated. Role of oxidative stress in fat deposition of animals was studied.

A fourth major project is the technology to use a cholesterol reductase-containing microbe to decrease blood cholesterol. Currently, he collaborates with Dr. Schmitz-Esser (Dept. of Animal Science) to genetically modify a GRAS microorganism to have cholesterol reductase activity. Role of bile acids and lecithins on absorption of lipids was studied.

A fifth project is a study of dietary and chemical control of production of greenhouse gases (e.g., CH₄ and H₂S) by livestock and the feeding of distillers dried grains with solubles on flavor and stability of milk and its products.

Dr. Beitz had collaborative projects with scientists at the National Animal Disease Center and the College of Veterinary Medicine on milk fever, vitamin D metabolism, nutritional immunology, and etiology and prevention of Johne's disease.

XIV. REVIEW AND EDITING

I have reviewed numerous manuscripts for colleagues, theses, dissertations, and research grant proposals of colleagues and of other off-campus investigators and have served as a member of departmental review teams and research grant review panels. I have not kept a complete record of these activities. I have served two, 3-year terms on Editorial Board of Journal of Animal Science, one, 3-year term on Editorial Board of Journal of Nutrition and one, 3-year term on Editorial Board of Veterinary Nutrition. Currently, I am on Editorial Boards of Nutrition Research and of Animal. During 1995, I served as Symposium Coordinator for the 1995 American Institute of Nutrition Symposium Proceedings that were published in J. Nutr. 126 (45):10075-13545. I coordinated three ASN/ADSA symposia a annual meetings of ADSA.

XV. OTHER ACTIVITIES

1. Determination of chemical composition of a bypass dietary fat (calcium salt of fatty acids) produced by Norel Corporation (Eiler Frederiksen), now Bioproducts, Inc., of Las Vegas, NV on a service-for-fee basis (1994-04).
2. Determination of fatty acid composition and dry matter, total lipid, and cholesterol content of pork chops from pigs of state and national genetic selection projects (NPPC) and for others in Department of Animal Science on a service-for-fee basis (1990-).

3. Determination of lipid and carbohydrate composition of pork from Carl Hamman of Mt. Sterling, OH on a service-for-fee basis (1995-97).
4. Determination of fatty acid composition of milk samples for Land O'Lakes Answer Farm of Webster City, IA (1999-03).
5. Determination of dry matter, total liquid, and fatty acid composition of meats from several livestock producers (e.g., J. Wood, J. Rismann).
6. Determined composition and tenderness of beef from feedlot and grazed cattle of R. Rosmann. Project was supported by funds awarded to Rosmann from Organic Farming Research Foundation.
7. Our laboratory continues to conduct assays of total lipid and fatty acid composition of meat and milk samples from the National Pork Board, companies, and farmers.
